About

The Policy Chronicle

The Policy Chronicle is the flagship blog of the Centre for Policies, Laws and Agenda (CPLAN), NUSRL. It serves as a platform for reflective, critical, and accessible discourse at the intersection of law, governance, and public policy. The blog seeks to engage with contemporary legal and policy developments, critically examine existing frameworks, and explore grounded, research-driven responses to emerging governance challenges. While encouraging analytical depth and academic rigour, The Policy Chronicle aims to make complex legal and policy debates accessible to a wider audience beyond academia.

About the Competition

The Centre for Policies, Laws and Agenda, NUSRL (CPLAN) is proud to announce the 3rd National Blog Writing Competition, 2026. The Competition invites law students, academicians, researchers, and professionals from all fields of law to move beyond merely describing established laws, doctrines, and institutional practices, and to critically examine the assumptions underlying them. Participants are encouraged to assess whether accepted legal and policy positions remain relevant, effective, and just in light of changing social, constitutional, political, economic, and technological realities, and to offer well-reasoned, practical alternatives.

Message from the Vice Chancellor

Legal and policy writing is among the most valuable skills a law student can develop. The ability to look beyond settled positions, question inherited assumptions, and articulate reasoned alternatives is central to the growth of the discipline itself. At NUSRL, we remain committed to nurturing this spirit of critical inquiry among our students and the wider legal community.

The 3rd National Blog Writing Competition, organised by the Centre for Policies, Laws and Agenda, NUSRL (CPLAN) invites participants to critically engage with the accepted positions of law and policy and to offer thoughtful, well-researched perspectives on issues shaping our legal and constitutional landscape. I extend my best wishes to all participants and look forward to reading their contributions.

Prof. (Dr.) Ashok R. Patil
Vice Chancellor, NUSRL, Ranchi
